

Mango and Radish Shrimp Ceviche

1 tablespoon plus ½ teaspoon salt, divided
1 pound (450g) medium (41/60) shrimp, peeled and deveined
¾ cup (180ml) fresh citrus juice (1 use 1 orange, 1 lemon, and 2 limes)
1 fresh mango (about 1 cup/180g), pitted, peeled, and diced
½ cup (25g) chopped fresh cilantro leaves
¼ cup (40g) minced red onion
1 Fresno or jalapeño pepper, minced or sliced
1 garlic clove, minced, or ¼ teaspoon garlic powder
1 medium avocado, pitted, peeled, and diced
¼ cup (30g) pepitas, toasted until fragrant in a dry pan
¼ cup (30g) thinly sliced radishes (3 to 4 radishes)
Tortilla chips, for serving

TIPS & TRICKS

Many traditional ceviches are made by “cooking” raw fish in citrus juice (more specifically, its citric acid). With shrimp, I like to boil it first to eliminate any risk of potentially harmful bacteria. Please don’t skip this step!

If you want to use fresh fish such as red snapper, halibut, or sea bass, you do not need to boil it first. Chop the deboned, skinless fillet into bite-size pieces, combine it with the citrus juice, and let it marinate for 20 minutes. Add the remaining ingredients and serve.

Ceviche is one of those great dishes that sounds much more complicated than it is. It’s essentially fresh shrimp that’s been gently poached as well as “cooked” with citrus juice—in this case orange, lemon, and lime—then tossed with a variety of light, fresh ingredients like avocado, mango, and watermelon radish to make a hybrid salad-dip. It takes virtually no time to pull together and requires only a bag of chips to transform into the perfect appetizer for a group or a light meal for one or two. SERVES 6

In a medium pot, bring 6 cups of water plus 1 tablespoon of the salt to a boil over high heat. Add the shrimp and poach for 1 to 2 minutes, until they turn pink and opaque. Immediately drain in a colander and rinse with cold water to stop the cooking. Drain well.

Chop the shrimp into bite-size pieces and place them in a large bowl. Add the citrus juice, mango, cilantro, onion, Fresno pepper, garlic, and remaining ½ teaspoon of salt. Stir well to combine.

Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate for at least 1 hour or up to 4 hours.

Top with the avocado, pepitas, and radishes, and serve with chips for dipping.

