

PINK LEMON GRANITA

MAKES 1 QUART * PREP/COOK TIME: 10 MINUTES, PLUS FREEZING

Believe it or not, (real) pink lemonade is made from pink lemons, commonly known as variegated lemons. Their skins are beautifully striated, with streaks of green; this lemon varietal is popular with home growers. Pink lemons are small, juicy, and thin-skinned, with pale pink flesh. The season is short for this rare citrus, which makes the juice highly prized. Here we make them into a simple, icy granita to showcase their pink hue and bright flavor. If pink lemons aren't available, try this recipe with regular old lemons. It will still be delicious.

2 cups water
1 cup sugar, or more to taste
Generous pinch kosher salt
1½ cups freshly squeezed pink lemon juice

6 lemons
+ 1 tsp. sugar

PREP

Place an 8-by-12-inch glass or metal baking pan in the freezer to chill. The pan should rest flat on an easily accessible spot.

MAKE THE BASE

In a small, heavy saucepan over medium heat, combine the water, sugar, and salt. Stir often with a heat-proof spatula, and when the sugar is fully dissolved, remove the pan from the heat and set aside to cool.

Stir the lemon juice into the room-temperature syrup. Taste the granita and, if needed, adjust it for sweetness by stirring in more sugar, 1 teaspoon at a time.

FREEZE

Remove the chilled baking pan from the freezer and pour in the liquid. Return the pan to the freezer. After 30 minutes, use a fork to stir the granita from the outside in, stirring any ice crystals back into the liquid. Return the pan to the freezer. Repeat this step every 30 minutes for at least 3 hours, or until the entire mixture has frozen and has a uniformly light, "dry," crystalline texture. When the granita has reached this stage, cover it tightly with plastic wrap until you are ready to serve.
